"I WANT CLOTHES JUST LIKE JOHNNY!"

I have been reading an article about cuttlefish and how in the last couple of decades science has become aware of a bay just south of Whyalla where millions migrate between May and August for the yearly mating season. It's the only known migration of its kind in the world.

The giant male cuttlefish grows to about a metre in length which certainly outdoes the shell we find on the beach. However, it has become a fairly major tourist attraction and known as the chameleon of the sea with its ability to adapt. It has millions of colour cells in its skin which allows it to change colour in an instant from purple, blue, green, white and yellow to put on a dazzling show. It also has the ability to change its skin from smooth to rocky, rough or spiky.

Adaptation is a key word as we focus on our readings today. We adapt to a new community. We adapt to changes in temperature. We seem to adapt to different morals and the changing world around us. Each year people seem to desire the latest trend. No doubt all families have had to adapt in some way. However, why do we do what we do? What happens to us when we do adapt? Is the urge to be like our friends or even those we don't know, something which drives us? What does it mean to live as Easter people?
