Standing firm in the Lord

In the Exodus reading for this Sunday we read that the Children of Israel got tired of Moses being up the Mountain with God and wanting a god like those in Egypt. Aaron, who was in charge in Moses' absence, consented and made them a calf out of gold which was sacrificed to. This was not long after receiving the Ten Commandments and them making a covenant with God. This was an act of rejection of the One who had performed mighty miracles on their behalf and freed them from slavery in Egypt. Time and again this happened in their history. Jesus reflects this in his parable of the wedding feast. The nation failed so often to stand firm in God.

Paul, in his letter to the Philippian church, encourages the members to 'stand firm in the Lord.' The phrase occurs twice in the reading. The Greek word used, stekete, is used for a soldier standing fast in the shock of battle with the enemy attacking. Today, as it was then, the Church is meant to be 'counter-cultural' and not conform to the ways of the world. Rather, the influence of the Church should be transformative of the society in which it finds itself. As individual Christians, we need to stand firm against the many pressures today that threaten our relationship with the Lord. It is important that we support each other in this.
